FEBRUARY 2022

From the President

HAPPY FEBRUARY!

It has been chilly here in Northern California, but at least the days are getting longer and spring will be here before we know it.

I have one month under my belt as your president, and wow, I've learned a lot in those thirty-one days. Mostly about what amazing members we have. I hope you all enjoyed getting to know our Vice President, Jennifer Morita, at our January meeting. I took lots of notes at her presentation and am working on my elevator pitch!

Among other jobs, Jennifer is our social media guru, and she's doing great things on multiple platforms. If you don't already, please consider following us on Twitter, Facebook, and Instagram. There are great conversations happening on all three platforms, and if you have something that you'd like us to promote, please let us know either on social media or by email and Jennifer will spread the word. And the more often you all like and especially comment on our posts, the more people will see them.

You have heard us talking about our upcoming Killer Workshop, and I'm sure you're curious to learn more. We have the board and a whole committee working hard to bring it to fruition, and registration will open on February 14th. Something that we are doing for the very first time is partnering with another Sisters in Crime chapter for the event, the Palmetto chapter based in Columbia, South Carolina. They are known for their amazing Mystery in the Midlands conference and we are thrilled to be working with them to bring you this brand new workshop. We are especially grateful to Paula Benson, who serves on both boards and is an absolute dynamo when it comes to bringing together topnotch speakers on nearly any topic, all while keeping her day job. Please give our South Carolina siblings a warm West Coast welcome!

As we've all gotten to know our fellow Siblings in Crime in chapters across the country thanks to Zoom, we felt it was important to find ways to work together with other chapters. Penny Manson and Paula are spearheading what I know will be a wonderful event for all. Please stay tuned for details!

Until then, our February meeting will be a valentine to my first detective crush and maybe yours, Nancy Drew. James Keeline will be with us to help explain some of the magic behind Nancy, Frank and Joe Hardy, and other creations of the Stratemeyer Syndicate. He also has an amazing book collection that I really wish I could see in person, but will have to settle for Zoom. I can't wait!

Oh, and please keep your fingers crossed that we will be able to have our first completely in person event in quite a while this month! If you're in town, please join us at Face in a Book on February 27th for our first Capitol Crimes Coffee Hour. This is a casual opportunity to meet other authors, so please come and invite your friends.

The rest of our year is starting to fill in nicely, so please take a look at our calendar of upcoming events, and keep writing and reading!

Plan Like Carolyn Keene

with James D. Keeline

February 19, 2022 1:00-3:00 pm

Most of us grew up reading Nancy Drew and the Hardy Boys. How did the creators plan these stories in the first half century of these series? What made them such page turners? Nancy Drew and the Hardy Boys have inspired countless mystery readers and writers. Learn some of the secrets of the Stratemeyer Syndicate that helped to make some of the most successful YA mysteries of the twentieth century.

James D. Keeline first discovered Tom Swift books on the family bookshelf when he was 8 and the Hardy Boys soon afterward. From 1988 to 2000 he was the manager of The Prince and the Pauper Collectible Children's Books where he surprised more than a few with the sad news that no one named Carolyn Keene wrote Nancy Drew.

He has become an expert in the Stratemeyer Syndicate and the history of series books. His Series Book Encyclopedia will list about 1,300 series published between the 1830s and the 1980s with details on the authors, artists, pseudonyms, ghostwriters, and publishers. His biography of Edward Stratemeyer will detail the life and career of the man behind many of the most popular series.

She soon discovers that gigs for middle-aged entertainers are scarcer than good hair days in the Pacific Northwest. With her bank account sliding toward zero, she swallows the indignity of donning a ten-pound wig and elaborate costume to perform at a child's birthday party.

Little does Sierra know she'll soon be upstaged by a corpse and become the leading-lady suspect.

As the bodies pile up, the entertainer adlibs her own crime-solving gig, a performance putting her in the crosshairs of a killer, and a finale that truly may be final.

POV - Terry Shepherd's monthly thoughts about The Craft

Terry Shepherd distills ideas about creation, tech and promotion into actionable ideas every author can leverage to build their brand and sell more books.

Getting The Most Out Of A Conference

Considering Left Coast Crime, Bouchercon, Thrillerfest or Killer Nashville? Conferences are a significant investment of time and money and filled with opportunity. How can we maximize a return on that investment? Here's my conference prep checklist.

- Know your goals. Why are you going and what do you hope to take away?
- Who do you want to meet? Things get busy on site. Try to schedule time with your targets in advance.
- Pick your panels carefully. Seek topics that help fill your skill gaps. Introduce yourself to the panel before things start. There is always a line afterwards. "I'm Terry Shepherd. Thrilled to hear your presentation and wanted to thank you for doing this for us." Sometimes that will be the extent of your interaction. Read their reaction to see if there is an opportunity for a deeper conversation later.
- Never eat alone. You are in a hive full of fellow practitioners. Schedule companions if you can. When you can't, keep your ears open and look for opportunities to meet new people over a meal.
- Make the most of the cocktail hours. The best ideas and the newest friendships happen at the bar or in the wine-line. If your target is already famous, give them some tempered appreciation. Avoid fan-speak. Ask how the conference is going for them and how their latest book is faring. If they are strangers, the usual, "Tell me about your book," line works like a charm. Follow Dale Carnegie's maxim and make it about them. Your fascination is likely to generate some attention in return.
- Selfies are OK... at the end of a conversation. It can be a fun closer and can build your photo library to use when you are discussing an author on social media.
- Is social media your thing? Post liberally in praise of panelists, people you met and the conference planners. Use appropriate hashtags to get noticed.
- Take a few minutes each night to jot down your takeaways, to-do lists and write thank-you notes. Conferences fill your head with ideas and motivation. Dump them into Evernote while it's fresh and follow up when you return home. If you harvested email addresses, send a short thank-you while the details are still fresh in your memory. The best thank-you notes mention something specific you are thankful for. Wish them well.

Practice these simple habits and you will leave with a larger network of support, actionable ideas and a game plan to leverage your investment to help increase your skill and ultimately your audience.

Food For Thought- a bi-monthly column by member Carol Newhouse

Carol Newhouse is a member of the National Sisters in Crime and the Toronto, Los Angeles, Guppies and Sacramento chapters. She writes stories for inclusion in anthologies, four newsletter columns, and is hard at work on her first book in the Zookeeper Mystery series. When not dreaming of dead bodies or taking virtual exercise classes, she plays competitive bridge, hangs out at the Toronto Zoo, and paints with watercolors. She can be reached at newhouse.carol@gmail.com.

IS PASSIVE ALWAYS BAD?

Passive is a dirty word.

In life winners spring to action whereas passive people tend to follow the leader.

Accolades follow adventurers. Mention heroes and legends like Billy the Kid come to mind. A television commercial reminds us that Fortune Favors the Brave.

But while trailblazers catch our eye and hold our attention, there are famous people who have recommended passive resistance. Dr. Martin Luther King and Ghandi are two that come to mind. This makes me wonder if passivity is always bad?

Everyone can think of people and situations that favor involvement over reticence. Candace Lynne Lightner founded Mothers Against Drunk Driving after her daughter was killed by an impaired truck driver in a hit and run. Steve Buscemi, a New York fireman before he turned actor, returned to his old fire unit and worked 12 hour days for several weeks to help clean up rubble after 9/11. In 2011, Kate Winslet re-entered a burning building to rescue Richard Branson's 90 year old mother. I stand in awe.

K-9 handlers train dogs to follow scents and find drugs, often with play rewards. After a success, the dogs are given a favorite toy to chew and shake. But dogs that are becoming part of a bomb detection unit are trained to passively alert. If the dog smells or senses a bomb, they simply sit in front of the target. No noise and no movement on their part equates to less danger for everyone in the vicinity.

In writing we search and destroy inactive words and watch for passive sentence structure. Yet some of the greatest openings ever written include "weasel words". To wit:

"It was love at first sight."

Catch 22, Joseph Heller

"It was a bright cold day in April and the clocks were striking thirteen."

Nineteen Eighty-Four, George Orwell

"It was the best of times,
It was the worst of times...."

A Tale of Two Cities, Charles Dickens

"He was an old man who fished alone in a skiff in the Gulf and he had gone eighty-four days now without taking a fish."

The Old Man and the Sea, Ernest Hemingway

FEBRUARY
2022

Writers heed the warning show don't tell. But a manuscript cannot rely solely on showing.

Telling functions as a transition between scenes and sequels. It works with economy to ground the reader and move the story forward. "Sunday at two in the afternoon" beats "He squinted at the sun, which had moved 3 feet to the west, and then considered the angle it made in relation to the house. Two in the afternoon, he concluded." The first sentence places us but does not get into unnecessary mechanics.

Internal monologues, a form of telling, are a crucial part of romance and mystery novels. In romance, the heroine might wonder why the hero turned and walked away, for example. Are his actions a reflection of his love for her? In mysteries, eager readers need to know the detective's thoughts to give them a fair opportunity to solve the crime.

Telling can describe relevant plot points that don't require a scene. An author may write, "the home owners built a secret room in 1982," but not describe its actual construction because the reader needs to know about the existence of this setting piece without a description of each plank being nailed in place. An interesting side note is that the word built is active, yet the sentence is telling the reader something and not showing it.

Mixing showing and telling augments mood. For example: They walked for five days (telling). The loosely packed dirt trail turned into a dust boil when the Santa Ana wind curled down from the mountains and blew grit into their mouths. (showing)

Exposition or telling sprinkled through a story breaks up the action and moderates its pace.

So it would seem the maxim that active is preferable to passive, in writing and in life, may capture only part of the truth.

Ready, Set, Query

Twitter Pitch Contests

- One day events when writers can pitch their manuscripts on Twitter
- 280 characters per Tweet
- Every space, punctuation mark and hashtag counts as a character
- If an agent gives you a heart, it shows they're interested, and you should query them
- Still need the query package – letter, synopsis, etc.
- Still need to research the agents who liked your Tweet

A huge thank you to our Vice President Jennifer Morita for her January presentation "Querying from A to Q" which was very insightful with lots of tips from her personal experience.
